Claysburg Neighborhood Primary Study Area

Introduction

This Claysburg Neighborhood Revitalization Plan was developed as a joint effort of the City Solutions Center (CSC) and the Center for Environmental Policy and Management (CEPM) at the University of Louisville in cooperation with and supported by the Jeffersonville Urban Enterprise Association (JUEA). The intention of the project was to create a set of strategies for improving the quality of life in the neighborhood by identifying the existing strengths and weaknesses of Claysburg and generating recommendations to optimize opportunities for improvements to its social, environmental, economic and physical infrastructure. The project's process aimed to develop a community-based vision, with input, strategizing and partnering by all participants. Attendees at the series of public meetings included Claysburg residents, business and nonprofit leaders, and representatives from the City of Jeffersonville's Departments of Economic Development, Planning and Zoning, and Police, as well as the City Council.

The project team would like to thank the City of Jeffersonville's Ken Ellis Senior Center and the Wesley United Methodist Church for generously providing meeting space and assistance during the public input/workshop phase of our endeavors.

Background and Overview

The Claysburg neighborhood lies just northwest of Jeffersonville, Indiana's downtown central business district. Covering just under a square mile, Claysburg is bounded by I-65 on the west, 10th Street on the south, Dutch Lane on the east, and New Applegate Lane on the north.

Its advantageous location provides Claysburg with immediate connections to Jeffersonville's downtown, primarily via Spring Street and numerous other secondary streets running northward from Market Street near the Ohio River to 10th Street. Three access points to Interstate 65, at 10th Street, 14th Street/Stansifer Avenue, and Eastern Boulevard, provide this neighborhood exceptional mobility opportunities for reaching Louisville across the Ohio River as well as other major Midwestern U.S. cities situated along I-65 such as Chicago, Indianapolis, and Nashville.

Claysburg II Towers

A full spectrum of land uses exists in Claysburg, giving it the potential to be a well-rounded, nearly self-sufficient neighborhood. Residential enclaves span the spectrum from privately-owned single-family homes, to multi-family and high-rise senior living buildings that are components of Jeffersonville's Housing Authority complex of facilities. Public institutions include Jeffersonville's City Hall within the Quartermaster Court complex, Spring Hill Elementary School, Lansden Park, Ken Ellis Senior Center, Jeffersonville's Wastewater Treatment Plant, and the U.S. Census Bureau's National Processing Center. Established and potential retail locations stretch along both Spring and 10th streets. Health care centers abound in Claysburg's southwest corner anchored by Clark Memorial Hospital and various private service providers' offices. Manufacturing is represented by firms such as Krunchers, Inc., a potato chip maker, and Kentuckiana Wood Products, a fabricator of wooden pallets that was established in 1978. Over a dozen churches of various denominations round out the variety of Claysburg's landscape.

Many of the residents of Claysburg have life-long connections here. Some have lived in Jeffersonville all their lives, and many others grew up in the community, moved away, and then returned home to raise families, live closer to parents or be near friends, loved ones and the places of their youth. Several types of community institutions provide engaged residents with opportunities to gather, socialize and formalize their collective vision of a constantly-improving quality of life for Claysburg. Among these are the many churches that have been a part of Claysburg life for decades and the Claysburg Neighborhood Association. More recent programs underwritten by the City of Jeffersonville and the Jeffersonville Urban Enterprise Association include the Jeffersonville Neighborhood Leadership Institute. This program, graduating nearly 100 resident leaders from throughout Jeffersonville in three sessions of 2010, 2011, and 2012, has among its graduates a total of 10 Claysburg residents.

Process

Community Engagement and Participation

The City Solutions Center (CSC) / Center for Environmental Policy and Management (CEPM) collaborative team emphasized a local resident participatory approach to the development of this neighborhood revitalization plan. The multi-step process included community participation from the outset. Community leaders from both the residential and business sectors were initially gathered to assist in clarifying the historic and current context of Claysburg and to share their recommendations for the project's goals and objectives as well as enumerating key Claysburg residents, businesses and City of Jeffersonville agency members whose participation in the project was considered crucial. The project's process insured the essential community input and feedback necessary for the development of a thoughtful, reasoned, and inclusive set of strategic recommendations aimed at improving Claysburg's quality of life as prioritized by its local stakeholders. The planning process was defined by the three distinct phases of inventory, analysis and synthesis of public stakeholder input and data gathering by the project team.

The inventory phase identified the details of Claysburg's existing conditions. Diligent gathering of U.S. census data, City of Jeffersonville land use and planning maps and documents, and an on-the-ground building use and condition survey provided the CSC/CEPM team with an effective portrait of the study area. Project participants from Claysburg and the City of Jeffersonville augmented this data with their identification of locally recognized landmarks, neighborhood assets and amenities, and points of concern.

Analysis of the existing condition data helped identify an initial set of community needs and preferences with respect to the steps and initiatives necessary for the betterment of Claysburg. This analysis included a participatory 'visioning' of a future new-and-improved Claysburg. Public workshop participants identified a collection of priority projects, the strategies needed to implement their visions and the partners, both public and private, that, if engaged, could lead to the successful implementation of each of their requested initiatives.

In the final synthesis phase of this project the CSC/CEPM project team organized the information gathered during two public workshops and developed draft descriptions of the projects. These were presented to the community participants for review and feedback. Necessary adjustments and refinements to the strategies were incorporated in this final revitalization plan.

Community Meetings

The CSC/CEPM consulting team facilitated four community meetings during the study's process. Claysburg residents, property owners, business owners/representatives, church leaders, nonprofit leaders, and City of Jeffersonville agency representatives were invited through direct mail, emails, flyers, and local newspaper announcements to attend two public workshops. A public review of the draft plan was held subsequently. Each public meeting drew approximately 30 attendees.

Project Introduction Meeting for Major Stakeholders – September 12, 2011

Over 50 major stakeholders were identified and invited to a project introduction meeting. Invitees were suggested by Claysburg Neighborhood Association members, City of Jeffersonville staff from the departments of Economic Development and Planning and Zoning, and Jeffersonville Neighborhood Leadership Institute facilitators. The purpose of the meeting was to introduce the Claysburg Revitalization Plan project to those assembled. Consulting team members from CSC and CEPM presented the project's background, overview, and purpose as well as a description of the anticipated public participation process, expected time frame, and eventual plan contents.

The major stakeholders were tasked with brainstorming appropriate meeting dates and times for both public workshops. Additionally, all attendees volunteered to assist in the effort to publicize the project and encourage a broad-reaching group of Claysburg residents, institutional representatives, and business owners to attend and actively participate in the planning meetings.

Public Workshop 1 - October 8, 2011

Approximately 30 Claysburg stakeholders attended the first of two public workshops on a Saturday morning at Wesley United Methodist Church. After breakfast, Jeffersonville Mayor Tom Galligan and Director of Economic Development Clarence Hulse welcomed all participants and encouraged everyone to take the fullest advantage of this project's opportunities for both visioning an improved Claysburg and developing a set of strategies that would assist the city in its efforts to increase the social, economic, and environmental vitality of the neighborhood.

Public Workshop 2 – October 29, 2011

As the follow-up to and continuation of Public Workshop #1, a second workshop gave stakeholders an opportunity to more fully explore ideas and potential solutions to the issues and concerns that were identified during the previous session.

The project facilitation team reviewed the 26 issues that had been discussed previously. Additional resources requested by the stakeholders, such as land use and zoning maps and the results of a windshield property use and condition survey that had been conducted by the consulting team, were presented and reviewed.

The potential neighborhood improvement initiatives, as created by the stakeholders, were sorted into four categories according to type of initiative and/or area of concern. Workshop attendees were asked to sit at one of four tables to work in smaller groups toward identifying ways that issues could be addressed by the community and the City of Jeffersonville. At this point in time, the issue categories were Public Infrastructure, Private Infrastructure, Neighborhood Identity and Services, and Economic Development.

The main agenda items and tasks for each group were as follows:

- What could work?
 - Brainstorming session
- Strategies exchange – sharing your table’s work with everyone
- Next steps – moving forward
 - Who will lead – identifying community coordinators for each initiative
 - What actions to take first? – Prioritizing the list of initiatives

Public Meeting – December 15, 2011

The CSC/CEPM project team created a “project sheet” for each of the 26 initiatives chosen by the stakeholders. These contained such information as the project’s description, time frame, and identify critical partnering organizations and the community coordinators who volunteered to become the project liaisons for the Claysburg neighborhood. Additionally, the project team developed a list of potential fiscal and technical assistance resources for each of the projects. Questions, comments and requests for project refinements were gathered by the consulting team for eventual incorporation into the final project report.

Strategies and Recommendations

Introduction to Matrix

The following matrix organizes issues that were considered to be the most important to the community and were developed through public meetings with community residents and stakeholders. The issues are organized into six general categories: Land Use, Transportation and Mobility, Streetscape Improvements, Economic Development, Community Identity and Services, and Housing.

Each issue is then organized into three sub-sections: recommendations, partners, and resources, which include suggested actions to address the issues. Additionally, they provide names of community associations and other entities that may be helpful in achieving the desired goals. The resources section is expanded in greater detail in Appendix B. Each issue in the matrix is also organized into individual project sheets that provide a more detailed explanation of the issue and elaborate the desires of community residents. These may be found in the Project Sheets section of this report.

Project Sheets

The following project sheets represent the same issues included in the matrix, organized in the six general categories: Land Use, Transportation and Mobility, Streetscape Improvements, Economic Development, Community Identity and Services, and Housing.

Each project is subsequently organized into five sub-sections that explain each issue and provide steps that may be taken in addressing them. The first section is an initiative description that expands on the project's main premise. The second section is composed of action steps, which include examples of actions that may be taken to achieve a desired goal. The remaining sections include partnerships, a community coordinator, and resources. These are intended to provide relevant contact information for community leaders, community associations and other entities that may be helpful in achieving the desired outcomes. The resources section is expanded to greater detail in Appendix B.

Land-Use

Appendix A: Windshield Survey

Criteria for Evaluating Building Condition

Exterior Condition of Residential Buildings

Based on a windshield survey toolkit developed by Urban Studies Institute staff during Fall 2002. Evaluations were based solely on what could be seen from the street or sidewalk using the following criteria:

- No need for repairs: Overall condition need not be perfect and might require routine cleaning and maintenance; paint may require some routine maintenance; a cracked window is permissible, but no missing panes or windows; and gutters should appear to function properly.
- Minor repairs needed: Large areas of peeling or missing paint with large amounts of bare wood; gutters are falling off or missing, rusted out, filled with debris and not functioning; or minor damage to windows, eaves, sashes, siding, or door trim.
- Major repairs needed: Overall shows considerable neglect; roof has holes, missing shingles, or sags badly; there are holes in walls or missing pieces of siding; windows are missing panes and may be repaired with boards or plastic sheeting; the foundation is crumbling, missing blocks or pieces, leans noticeably, or has large cracks indicating shifting; the structure leans, sags, or appears not to be solid; fireplaces appear to be damaged beyond use, missing large chunks or many bricks, and an apparent safety hazard; or there is significant damage from storms, trees, etc.
- Dilapidated, not safely habitable: Abandoned and in complete disrepair; if only a foundation or rubble remained, then the lot was classified as vacant.

Business and Industry Revolving Loan Fund, Jeffersonville Department of Redevelopment

<http://www.cityofjeff.net/redev/redevmain.htm>

The city's revolving loan fund loans lends money to local businesses for economic development purposes. The fund is administered by the Revolving Loan Fund Committee, with representatives appointed by the Mayor. Loans must meet one of the following three conditions:

1. Promote significant opportunities for the gainful employment of the county's or municipality's residents.
 2. Attract a major new business enterprise to the county or municipality.
 3. Retain or expand a significant business enterprise in the county or municipality.
- Issue ED-6: Increase Access to Capital for Business Ventures

Capital Access Program, Indiana Economic Development Corporation

<http://iedc.in.gov/programs-initiatives/Capital-access-program>

The Capital Access Program provides businesses with access to capital by encouraging lenders who participate in the program to make loans they may not otherwise make. It asks lenders to consider making slightly riskier loans that might not meet conventional small business lending requirements. Most Indiana businesses with fewer than 500 employees are eligible, and loans may be made up to $5,000,000.

- Issue ED-6: Increase Access to Capital for Business Ventures

Center for Environmental Policy and Management, University of Louisville

<http://louisville.edu/cepm/publications/practice-guides-collection>

The Center provides practical advice and support in the form of Practice Guides to policy-makers and organizations on environmental and sustainable communities' policy issues. Practice guides relevant to food access include:

- o Practice Guide #25 – Urban Agriculture and Soil Contamination: An Introduction to Urban Gardening
 - o Practice Guide # 27 –Establishing Urban Agriculture in Your Community: What You Need to Know Before You Get Your Hands Dirty
 - o Practice Guide #28 – Safe Container Gardening

About the Authors

Claysburg Neighborhood Revitalization Plan

June 2012

The Claysburg Neighborhood Revitalization Plan was developed as a joint effort of the City Solutions Center (CSC) and the Center for Environmental Policy and Management (CEPM) at the University of Louisville in cooperation with and supported by the Jeffersonville Urban Enterprise Association (JUEA). This report was written by J. Michael McCoy, John W. Vick, Steven C. Bourassa, Megan Enyeart, Carol Norton, Shannon Scroggins, Allison Smith, and Lauren Heberle. Additional contributions were made by University of Louisville Master of Urban Planning students Luis Calvo and Abigail Free. Site plan renderings and other graphics created by J. Michael McCoy. The report was compiled by Patrick Piuma and Luis Calvo.

City Solutions Center (CSC)

Formed in 2008, the University of Louisville's City Solutions Center extends U of L's urban mission across Kentucky by providing hands-on consulting to help communities engage citizens to define challenges, develop buy-in for solutions, and create implementation plans for measurable results. The Center draws upon existing faculty, staff, and student expertise throughout the University of Louisville to provide resources to assist Kentucky's communities. The City Solutions Center is housed at U of L's Urban Design Studio.

Center for Environmental Policy and Management (CEPM)

The University of Louisville Center for Environmental Policy and Management (CEPM) seeks to provide research and technical assistance to local, state, and tribal governments, businesses and non-profit organizations regarding sustainable environmental policy and program development and evaluation. The CEPM houses the U of L Environmental Finance Center serving EPA Region 4. The EFC at U of L is a member of the Environmental Finance Center Network (EFCN) which allows us to access environmental experts from across the country from 10 different academic institutions.
