SACS 3.4.3 Admissions and Recruitment 2017

The University of Louisville publishes admissions policies for all undergraduate, graduate, and professional school programs that are consistent with the university's mission to pursue excellence and inclusiveness to educate and serve its community and to become a "nationally recognized metropolitan research university." Admissions policies and requirements for online and off-site programs are consistent with those for face-to-face programs. UofL publishes its admissions policies in various formats and venues, including the university's website, the Undergraduate and Graduate catalogs and in professional schools' student handbooks or bulletins, all of which are available online. All admission requirements follow policies established by the university in conjunction with academic programs and are clear, reasonable, and consistently implemented. All forms of print and digital communications officially representing the institution are consistent with catalogue content and accurately portray the conditions and opportunities available at the institution.
