

Lights, Camera...Ideas to Action

A multimedia project in Spring 2009 to jumpstart students' creative and critical thinking skills in digital environments.

Lights, Camera...Ideas to Action is a campus-wide curricular and creative vehicle for faculty and students in Spring 2009. This project will promote discourse – both face to face and digitally – around what it means to put into action the knowledge and ideas that students are learning as part of their undergraduate experience.

New!

Faculty are invited to participate in this innovative digital discourse by:

- Plugging a course topic or assignment into the two themes of Ideas to Action (critical thinking & community engagement)
- Harnessing the cutting edge resources and staff support in the Digital Media Suite
- Working with staff in the Delphi Center for Teaching & Learning to design and integrate a new or revised assignment

In April 2008, students and faculty participating in Lights, Camera...Ideas to Action will be invited to unveil and display their multimedia projects for the entire campus during i2a Day – an event that is designed to heighten awareness, interest and enthusiasm for our i2a initiative focused on enhancing student learning.

Interested?

Contact Hannah Anthony at hannah.anthony@louisville.edu or 852-7611 by Wednesday, December 10th to learn more! This program can accommodate up to 8 faculty participants.