

IOSBANI MORALES ALBERTERIS

I was born and raised in Cuba. I received my medical doctor degree and family medicine residency diploma from the University of Havana. After completion of family medicine residency I started as a faculty in a clinic in Havana, Cuba.

I was interested in international medicine and was part of the medical team relief when the tsunami struck Sri Lanka in 2004. I also experienced helping communities in need in Lesotho, Africa where I worked in a hospital and managed an antiretroviral clinic during a period of 2 years.

I chose the University of Louisville to practice Family Medicine not only because it has served my need to develop a deeper understanding of the U. S. medical system, but also I have received sincere support from the Louisville community, family and friends which I am very grateful and in return I have a great deal to contribute. The University of Louisville Family Medicine Program has the precise blend of residents, faculty and staff to make any task enjoyable, and better serve our patients; believe me there is not a dull moment.

My interests include traveling around the world with my wife, listening to music, dancing, playing any sport (even if I am not good at it). Living here has been wonderful, Louisville has the glitter of a big city but people have the warmth of a small town. My plan is to practice in Louisville after completing residency.
