THE CEREMONIAL MACE

The ceremonial mace as used today derives from the original mace used as a weapon. The mace is a highly ornamented staff of wood and/or metal, carried before a sovereign or other high official in civic ceremonies by a mace-bearer, intended to represent the official's authority. Almost all universities and freestanding colleges have a mace, used almost exclusively at commencement exercises.

In the fall of 1966, the University of Louisville commissioned John Prangnell, sculptor and Assistant Professor of Fine Arts, to prepare a University mace. Prangnell's approach was to avoid the standard format used for such maces and to develop an instrument to convey the University's involvement with the future. On June 11, 1967, the University of Louisville Board of Trustees formally accepted the mace and Registrar John M. Houchens carried it for the first time in the university-wide commencement procession that same day. It has been at the head of all formal university-wide academic processions since that time. In universities that have a number of constituent colleges or faculties, as is the case at the University of Louisville, each college, faculty or school often has a smaller mace that is used at school specific functions. Our Grand Marshal is carrying the School of Medicine's mace in today's convocation ceremony.

ACADEMIC APPAREL

The current style of academic apparel in the United States is barely a century old. Harvard used caps and gowns at its 250th Anniversary in 1886. The University of Michigan's graduating class of 1894 was the first to wear caps and gowns for a commencement. Representatives of a number of colleges and universities met at Columbia University in 1895 and fashioned an Academic Costume Code. The Academic Costume Code revised slightly in 1932 and again in 1960, is still in use today.

Doctoral robes are typically black, although some schools use robes in the school's colors. In general, doctoral gowns are similar to the gowns worn by master's graduates, with the addition of three velvet chevrons on the sleeves and velvet-facing running down the front of the gown. A doctoral hood is 4 feet in length and the width of the hood edging is 5 inches. Most line the hood with the official color or colors of the institution conferring the degree (University of Louisville's color is red). The edging of the hood should be velvet or velveteen and should indicate the subject to which the degree pertains. Green, the color of medieval herbs, was adopted for medicine. The tassel worn on the mortarboard or tam may indicate the university's colors, or the colors of the specific college or discipline from which the student is graduating. Cords or sashes may also be worn, representing various academic achievements.
