A. School of Music

School of Music at UofL is an institution with high musical and academic standards whose programs have developed excellent reputations in many fields of study.

The faculty and student ensemble program is very accomplished and has earned both national and international recognition. As a consequence of this recognition, the University of Louisville recently named the music ensembles program in the School of Music as a University Program of National Excellence, one of only a handful of university programs to hold this designation. The Louisville region with its rich arts and educational environment provides many opportunities for the School of Music to engage with professional, amateur, and educational organizations to the mutual benefit of our students and the community. A number of academic programs within the School have developed reputations for special strength, with great potential for expanding programs of excellence throughout. Additionally, the association with special programs such as the Grawemeyer Award for Music Composition, the Jamey Aebersold Summer
Jazz Workshops, the New Music Festival, and the Louisville Chamber Music Society bring distinction and recognition to Louisville and the School of Music.

B. Ekstrom Library

Robotic Retrieval System - Capacity of 1.2 million volumes. Takes 30 seconds to retrieve your request.

World’s largest institutional archive of the works of Edgar Rice Burroughs (including Tarzan materials). The collection contains over 100,000 items ranging in scope from the author's earliest school books to current promotional materials.

Historical Photographic Archives
The Photographic Archives houses almost 2 million photographs and associated records and manuscripts.

C. QUAD

Center of campus park-like setting. Many student-oriented events are held in the Quad.

D. The Thinker (often the image associated with the University of Louisville)

This is the first large-scale bronze cast of The Thinker. French sculptor Auguste Rodin personally supervised the casting in Paris. It came out of the mold Dec. 25, 1903, and was completed in early 1904. As the first large-scale Thinker ever cast, UofL’s Thinker claims priority as the most original.

E. Louis D. Brandeis School of Law

Named for Louis D. Brandeis, former Supreme Court justice who arranged for the law school to be a depository for Supreme Court records and briefs. It is the oldest law school in Kentucky and the fifth oldest in continuous operation in the nation and one of the first to implement a 30 hour public service requirement. Legend has it that the ashes of Justice Brandeis and his wife are buried under the Portico.

F. Schneider Hall

Home to the Department of Fine Arts, it has a student art gallery, a fine arts library along with teaching studios and classrooms.

G. Shumaker Research Building

This building houses research labs used by engineers, biologists, chemists, cancer and genetics researchers and the state’s largest clean room. The Micro/Nano Technology Service Center (clean room) is utilized for the fabrication, packaging, and testing of various microelectronic devices and circuits, electro-optic devices, micromachined sensors and actuators, and various other MEMS (microelectromechanical) devices and structures. Due to stringent processing requirements, the lab is designed to meet class 1000 clean room specifications throughout with certain areas and rooms in the lab satisfying class 100 specifications. Activities that can be performed in the Microfabrication Laboratory include: photolithography, oxidation, thermal diffusion, evaporation, sputtering, metalization, spinning, chemical vapor deposition (CVD), anisotropic and isotropic etching, reactive ion etching (RIE), bulk and surface micromachining, silicon-silicon bonding, electrostatic bonding, wire bonding, dicing, packaging, probe inspection, measurement and testing.
