International Service Learning & Research Program: BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

Applications with $100 deposit due October 1, 2014

This off-campus cultural immersion experience is intended to expose students to applicable theories of intergroup contact, direct approaches to conflict transformation, transitional justice, and empirical research specific to the 1991-1995 civil wars in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Emphasis is based on cognitive, social, and peace psychology perspectives.

Learning/Research Experience

Based on the pedagogical model of learning-through-doing, students will gain practical service-learning/research experience working directly on a faculty member’s on-going research project. Students will develop knowledge of the impact that intergroup contact has in assisting conflict transformation, behavioral and mental health, and multicultural understanding.

Multiple Learning Environments

Students will be engaged in social activism at an international level, connecting directly with the field research activities of the faculty director. While abroad, students will be engaged in multiple learning environments specific to developing a deeper understanding and respect for cultural/ethnic/religious diversity through direct contact and interaction with individuals from Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Educational Enrichment

Students will gain critical thinking skills that entail effective communication and commitment to overcoming our native egocentrism and sociocentrism.

Once selected, students are required to register for the 1-credit hour Spring Term PSYC course: Intergroup Contact and Conflict Resolution. These pre-departure sessions will include completion of the CITI Human Subject’s Protection Training Basic Course for social and behavioral research.

Service learning, journal writing while abroad, and a portfolio will serve as the basis for an empirical grade. Self reflection will be an integral process in completing the required portfolio.
