Teach Out Plan for MEd – Instructional Technology

The Master of Education (MEd) in Instructional Technology is designed for Rank 2 Kentucky certified teachers who would like to earn a master's degree, pursue Rank 1 status and complete the endorsement for Instructional Computer Technology. This program is offered by the College of Education and Human Development (CEHD). Due to low enrollments and degree production in this program for several years, CEHD has decided to suspend the MEd in Instructional Technology effective Spring 2021.

The Kentucky Council on Postsecondary Education (CPE) maintains the statewide program inventory database and will be notified of the pending program suspension. The CPE practice is that programs are suspended for five years before they are considered officially closed. This approach allows for the reporting of enrollments and degrees for students in the pipeline.

How will affected parties (students, faculty, staff) be informed of the program suspension?

The impacted faculty were part of the decision to suspend these two programs. The impacted students will be notified by the program faculty to craft a course of action to complete their degrees. This information will also be added to the CEHD website as well as noted in the course catalog. Additionally, the advising offices will be notified of this change in order to ensure that prospective students know of this change.

How will currently enrolled students complete the program with minimal disruption?

Courses will continue to be offered, either as a course-by-conference or as a standard class until the students have completed the program. Many of the courses will continue to be offered in the instructional computer endorsement are still available in conjunction with the MEd in Teacher Leadership.

Will the teach-out plan incur additional charges/expenses to the students; if yes, how will the students be notified?

There will be no additional cost to students as a result of the decision to suspend the programs.
