

Women in the Public Eye: How the History of Women's Suffrage is Memorialized in Public Spaces

Presented by

The University of Louisville

Department of History

Wednesday March 25 -12 noon

at the

FILSON HISTORICAL SOCIETY

1310 S 3rd St, Louisville, KY

Panelists will discuss how public institutions present the history and significance of women's voting rights. Topics covered will include the national movement for suffrage, the links between suffrage and the Progressive Movement and the struggle for African American voting rights, the role that African American women played in the Kentucky Suffrage Movement, and a new public school curriculum that encourages students to engage in active citizenship.

Panelists:

Moderator: Tracy K'Meyer, University of Louisville

Ellen DuBois, University of California Los Angeles

Abby Glogower, Filson Historical Society

Karen McDaniel, Kentucky State University

Rachel Platt, Frazier Historical Museum

Ryan New, Jefferson County Public Schools.

Special thanks to our Co Sponsors:

Commonwealth Center for Humanities and Society

McConnell Center

UofL Women's Center

Department of Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies

Department of Anthropology

Department of Comparative Humanities

Department of Political Science

Department of Sociology