Why do we cite?

- To give credit to others for their ideas, words, and images
- To lend credibility to our arguments
- To connect our ideas to other writers' ideas in our field
- To provide readers with sources that they can use for their own projects

When do we cite?

- When we quote other writers' words
- When we paraphrase (i.e., using our own words to explain someone else's ideas)
- When we use another writers' tables, graphs, or images

What do I do if the information I need is not contained in this packet?

- Work with a Writing Center consultant
- Check the APA Handbook, 7th Edition

Where in the paper do I put my citations?

- You need to cite your sources both inside of your text and in a References page located at the end of your paper.

In-text Citation

APA provides two options for citing cite sources in text: narrative style and parenthetical style. Both require the author name(s) and date.

Guideline	Narrative example	Parenthetical example
One or two authors: Include the author or authors name(s) and the year of the publication.	Oswal (2015) recommends building access into online course design at the beginning of the process.	Online course designers should start the development process with access in mind (Oswal, 2015).
Three or more authors: Use the last name of the first author, follow with "et al." and the year.	Brizee et al. (2009) remind educational website developers that users are the ultimate authority in assessing the effectiveness of a learning object, tool, or lesson.	Users, in this case students, are the ultimate authority in assessing the effectiveness of an online object, tool, or lesson (Brizee et al., 2009).
Organization as author: Write out the organization's full name the first time it is used and include the acronym. Use the acronym for any subsequent uses of the source.	The Association of Departments of English (ADE, 2011) found that the four most common required courses for MA in English degrees nationally are research methods, literary theory, American literature, and British literature.	The four most common required courses for the MA in English degree nationally are research methods, literary theory, American literature, and British literature (Association of Departments of English [ADE], 2011).
No author listed: Use the title, or shortened title, of the work in place of author name. Note that using sources with no author can raise credibility issues.	Websites such as "#Alt-academy" (2011) have started discussions about alternative career paths for graduate students in humanities.	A starting place to discuss alternatives to tenure-track employment is literature about "alternate academic" careers (e.g. #Alt-academy," 2011).
Citing information found in another source: Include the source you have, preceded by "as cited in." Whenever possible, you should find the original source and cite it directly.	Wright's report (as cited in Bragdon, 2013) emphasized the importance of increased hydration in the prevention of obesity.	Increasing hydration is important in preventing obesity (Wright, as cited in Bragdon, 2013).
Direct quotation or paraphrase: Follow the appropriate guidelines above and indicate the location in the text, often a page number, where the words are located.	According to Doe (2011), one of the paradoxes of democracy is that "individual freedom is possible when there is discipline regulated by the society" (p. 23).	Mentorship is not only an individual's responsibility because "ethical mentorship requires ongoing institutional and interpersonal efforts" (CCCC, 2019, para. 2).
